Remember that your puppy is not a mind reader and what is normal behavior for humans can be completely foreign language and offensive to dogs. Instead, you can use dog talk to get your message through. Humans are primates who touch and hug, gesture with their hands, and have a louder and higher tone of voice when they get upset. All these things can be confusing or even threatening puppies, especially, but also adult dogs. Avoid these mistakes when talking to your puppy: Tilted over the puppy: People are taller than the cubs, and it's natural to lean down to talk to them or pet them. But hanging over a dog is disturbing, because in dog talk it means I'm the boss, I'm in control. This can be upsetting or even frightening for puppies who already accept your status as boss. They can use blink gestures, such as wetting, to show they are not a threat. Strange dogs that don't know they can become aggressive or defensive when bent over them. They're just fighting against what they think is a challenge. Instead of leaning over the top of the puppy, give the dog a place to approach. Turn sideways and lean on the floor so that your height and state don't seem challenging. Staring at hard eye contact: Direct eye contact can also be intimidating. Use your own sedative signals to tell him you're not hurt. Turn your head, divert your eyes and move slowly to give the puppy time to build the courage to stand on his ground or even approach. Duck on the head: Imagine being a puppy size and a half the size of your entire body descending to the top of your head. Wouldn't you get away with it and take cover? Instead, consider how puppies and dogs meet each other - smell communication with showers, connect later. So give your hand, palm down to sniff on the back of your fingers, without the risk of being grabbed. He then suggested a scratch on the front of his chest or on the side of his neck. Avoid pating the top of the head until you know the pet very well, and this is shown a good understanding of human conversation. Hug: For puppies and dogs, hugs are not a sign of love. Our pets use filming and fighting during play or fights, during mating behavior, or simply to show dominance. Embrace and teach your children to take turns showing love for dogs. Otherwise, the puppy can be attacked in revenge on what as an attack. Kissing: Yes, the new puppy seems to lick the lyg all the time, kind of like a kissing maniac. You may think of the kiss as an expression of love and affection. But even among people, kissing can mean more respect. Respect. Adoration. Dogs and puppies show their love in other ways. Instead, it's used to show respect, and a declaration that I'm not a threat. Subordinate dogs lick a more dominant dog or face face or side of the mouth as a gesture of relief. If you or your child try to mimic this canine signal and kiss the dog or near the mouth or eyes, in dog tongue it tells him that you are subordinate to him. This could get you in trouble. A large majority of the dog bites the target face, because the child hugs or tries to kiss the dog. Hugging and kissing shows obedience to a puppy. Kymberlie Dozois Photography/Getty Images Now that you understand what your body language means, use it to talk to your puppy. When you want your underage adultery to stand up and mind, or you want to encourage the shy dog to be more confident, just communicate with him like a canine. And no, you don't have to wave your tail. These signals will show your dog that they need to be respected: Use a calm, low-tone voice and short haircuts. Highly upset voices can sound whiny and send the wrong signals that you are not responsible. Use the same words for the same thing every time, so your puppy learns his language with repetition. You will not know that wait and stay here and I will come back or do not move means the same to you. Select one. Puppies thrive on routine. The clicker training technique works especially well to tell what these words mean. Stay upright. The dogs in charge should not make production from this, they simply wear as a boss. Everyone trusts them so they don't have to prove it. Dogs do not use hands to control the movements of others – they use blocks, tucking and lean, and control space. Consider the way the shepherd dog flocks cattle and prompts sheep to move without touching. You can do the same thing by using your body to control the movements of a puppy. Learn these ways to communicate puppy should not be creepy or excited: For shy puppies, think about ways to relieve anger, as dogs do. A louder, slower, calming voice can tell the baby you're not a threat. Don't bend over and lean over the top of the dog. Crouch or kneel. Let the puppy approach you instead of chasing him. If you really want to strike a curiosity puppy and show that you are not a threat, lie motionless on the ground. If you need to approach, bend in an oblique corner instead of walking or running to the puppy directly. Lick your lips or yawn while you're watching. Try the dog laugh. Kihai and see if the puppy comes back. Or imitate the unruly breath of canine laughter that dogs use exclusively in a game to say you mean nothing wrong. Kneeling a puppy indicates that you are not a threat. portishead1 / Getty Images If you suspect that your pet is sick, call a vet immediately.
